TUESDAY MORNING, JANUARY 11, 1859.

COMMUNICATED. THE LAST MARK ON THE CALANDER OF 1858. Thou art marked from the annals of Time, Old Year, Thy last hours are numbered and gone! The light of thy sun leaves no radiance to cheer, Thy clouds are all scattered and flown.

Not a day is now left on thy calander's face, Unmarked by thy footsteps, oh! Year. Thy passage though silent, no power can efface, Though thou'rt gone to eternity's sphere! One thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight years, Have floated from Time's ancient shore, And thou, with thy blessings, thy smiles, and thy Art gone, to return never more! We watched the last barque, though the hour was late, For it bore a lov'd friend from our sight; In its prow thou was't seated, dear old fifty-eight, And we saw thee through shadows of night. The stroke of thy oars, grew faint, and more faint, Thy barque o'er the waters more dim; Still we watched thee move on, while sorrow's sad plaint, Breathed over our hearts a low hymn. The last stroke was heard, as the midnight's deep chime, Broke forth on the listening ear, And we scarcely believed 'twas thy last note of J'ly Time: It came o'er the dark waves so clear.

Yes, we caught the last glimpse as thy boat swept away, Leaving nought on Time's stream but the foam, It was noiselessly launched ere the breaking of

And eternity's sea is thy home!

Oh! often we turn, (though nought we can view,) To that ocean so boundless and deep, For our hearts dearest treasures its waters no strew,

And we think of their brightness-and weep. B. Clarke County, Virginia.
